When King Solomon Allsop was two years old, his parents, Mariana and Siree, noticed that he constantly seemed fatigued, had sporadic high temperatures, and showed an uncommon amount of bruises—even on his eyelids. His pediatrician in the Poconos, where the Allsops live, performed immediate blood tests and the results helped diagnose King with aplastic anemia. This serious and rare condition causes bone marrow damage, which severely slows or stops the production of new blood cells. It can be life-threatening as the body is left unable to fight off infection and disease.

King began receiving blood transfusions every week to build up his blood cell count and platelet levels. He was eventually declared transfusion dependent, meaning he needed the transfusions to survive. When King was six, his doctors determined that King would need a bone marrow transplant and referred them to The Children’s Hospital of Philadelphia (CHOP). Because of King’s fragile state, the Allsops were told that his procedure and recovery time would be lengthy.

As they began to prepare for the trip to Philadelphia for King’s treatment, the Allsops explored many options and all of them seemed grim. They thought they would need to rent an apartment—even though they could not afford it—because they would be away from home for so long. Siree shares, “It was very stressful. We were trying to figure out how we could pay rent on an apartment, our mortgage, all of our other bills, support our family and, on top of all of that, we’d both need to take a lot of time off work so at least one of us could be with King while he was in the hospital. It seemed impossible. We even moved our wedding date up before King’s transplant. We didn’t know what the future would hold and knew it was important that he see us get married.”

When a social worker at CHOP told them about the Philadelphia Ronald McDonald House, the Allsops were thrilled. “You never expect that your child and family will have to go through something like this and for such a long period of time. The House has alleviated so much stress and lessened a huge financial burden,” shares Siree.

King has a rare type of bone marrow, making it difficult to find a match for his transplant within his family and even in donor banks. His mother is only a 50 percent match and, although it was risky, doctors were hopeful that performing a half-match bone marrow transplant could help improve King’s condition. King’s first bone marrow transplant failed, but thankfully, a second transplant about a month later was successful. Both of the transplants and King’s recovery process took over six months, and the Allsops were grateful to have the House as a resource during those months.

““The House has alleviated so much stress and lessened a huge financial burden”

The House offered the Allsops other comforts that helped make their situation a little easier, as King has to miss out on many of the day-to-day activities of childhood, like playing with his friends. “The playroom helped separate the House from the hospital. My wife and I enjoy seeing King have fun and laugh while he’s at the House and we are so grateful that we’ve been able to stay here,” says Siree.

The House also served the family for a more critical purpose—supporting King’s delicate health. “Once King was allowed to leave the hospital, the House was vital to his safety,” Siree says. “We had to be within a half an hour of the hospital in case King’s temperature spiked or his life could be seriously in danger. The House offers many benefits, but King’s safety is obviously our number one concern.” King’s condition makes every day things such as laundry and drinking water a challenge for him and his family. Every single day, the Allsops have to be sure to wash his clothes, sheets, towels and any other linen that he is in contact with. Fortunately, the resources at the House make it easier to keep King healthy. “Laundry may not sound like a big deal, but we wouldn’t be able to do this amount if we were staying anywhere else and King’s health would be in jeopardy without it. They even offer the right type of water that he can drink.”

The Allsops also bonded with the staff and volunteers while staying at the House. Siree shared, “everyone went above and beyond to accommodate our needs.” King excitedly mentioned that his favorite moment of being at the House was when a Guest Chef Group helped him bake an apple pie. He says, “I usually don’t like sweet things but my apple pie was delicious. I want to make another one.”

We are grateful to have made this difficult time a little easier for their family. King Solomon is recovering well from his transplants and we look forward to seeing the Allsops when they return to Philadelphia for his follow up appointments.
As 2016 comes to a close, I’m inspired by the generous support we have received throughout the year from our donors. Thanks to their spirit of giving, the Philadelphia Ronald McDonald House is able to provide the comfort and hope that families of seriously ill children rely on every day. I’m also energized by the volunteers and Board Members who altruistically give their time to the House, providing compassion to families while ensuring the success of our programs.

I would like to take this opportunity to welcome Dick and Carol Vermeil as honorary Board Members. Dick and Carol have a long history of supporting the House and this year they have renewed their commitment. In October, we hosted our first-ever Champions of Hope Awards dinner, and thanks to their participation as the event’s special guests, we were able to accomplish our fundraising goal that night. Dick and Carol have also volunteered to help us increase awareness of the House through public service announcements, which I am confident you will see in the coming months.

As we celebrate the holiday season, please remember the families staying at our two Houses, who are away from their homes, friends, and families while seeking the best medical care available for their children. Similar to the Allsops’ story on the front page, our guest families face myriad challenges and hardships, yet they are able to keep their families close by staying at the House—thanks to the continued support of donors like you. I ask you to keep the families of the Philadelphia Ronald McDonald House in your hearts this holiday season.

My warmest wishes,

Peter J. Degnan
Board President

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Every night at the Philadelphia Ronald McDonald House (PRMH), families find comfort and hope through the most difficult time in their lives. Not having to worry about where they will spend the night while their child undergoes treatment at one of Philadelphia’s hospitals is just the beginning. The House’s dedicated staff and volunteers live to help, and you’ll find them eagerly driving vans to take families to appointments, preparing meals, and offering compassion.

Alicia Smith, a mother staying at the Philadelphia Ronald McDonald House on Chestnut Street, shares, “Staying at the House allows Gregory to have his best friend—his younger brother, Peter—with him while he goes through radiation therapy. While he was in the hospital, Gregory rarely saw Peter and asked for him frequently. It’s so comforting for him and it’s a huge relief for me to be able to stay with Gregory and still spend time with my other children. I don’t have to worry about cooking, cleaning or transportation because of the House. When you walk inside the gate, you forget about the stress and hardships of the day—it is so uplifting for all of us. I’m very grateful to have the House as a resource for our family and I don’t know what we would do without it.”

As you plan your holiday giving, think of families, like the Smiths, who are able to keep their family close and find comfort and hope by staying at the Philadelphia Ronald McDonald House.

YOUR GIFT CAN HELP KEEP FAMILIES CLOSE
We are excited to announce Dick Vermeil, former head coach for the National Football League’s Philadelphia Eagles, and his wife, Carol, as Honorary Board Members and Ambassadors of the Philadelphia Ronald McDonald House. Dick and Carol have a long history of supporting PRMH and the families it serves.

As Honorary Board Members and Ambassadors, Dick and Carol will help promote the work that PRMH does to serve families with seriously ill children, and this year they are raising awareness of the House through public service announcements (PSAs). These PSAs will run in taxicabs and at gas stations throughout the Philadelphia region thanks to our generous friends at Verifone.

The Vermeils have also initiated a new way for supporters to donate to PRMH through the Coach Vermeil Fund. Individuals can give directly to the fund by visiting www.philaRMH.org/coach and making a donation which will go a long way in supporting the work that we do and the families with seriously ill children who need the comfort and hope that the House provides.

About Dick & Carol Vermeil:

Dick Vermeil had one of the most distinguished coaching careers in National Football League history. His time coaching officially wrapped up when he announced his retirement from professional football in January 2006. He spent 15 seasons as an NFL head coach and was a member of the league’s coaching fraternity for 19 seasons. Coach Vermeil has also had a prestigious career as a football broadcaster, analyzing both NFL and college games. Beyond his distinguished coaching career, Dick Vermeil has become a successful businessman with a focus on wine.

Coach Vermeil’s wife, Carol, devoted her life to their family and generously supporting many worthy causes. Her hard work and dedication has brought comfort and support to those in need. When the Vermeils returned home to Philadelphia, they have together found the time to work with the Mary Campbell Center, Wistar, Elwyn Inc., the Boy Scouts of Chester County, the Philadelphia Boys and Girls Club, People for People, C.H.O.P Amy Vermeil Fund, Devereux Organization, the Wounded Warrior Foundation and several other charities.

The Philadelphia Ronald McDonald House is honored to have Dick and Carol Vermeil join our team and we are grateful for their commitment to helping us support families of seriously ill children.

OTHER WAYS TO GIVE TO THE HOUSE

Have you thought about the possibility of giving a gift to the House that will not cost you during your lifetime? Consider the following planned giving options:

- Make a gift with appreciated securities. The IRS allows its most significant tax breaks for gifts of appreciated securities.
- Add PRMH to your will without affecting your cash flow during your lifetime.
- Gift your retirement plan — it may be worth more when donated to PRMH than to your heirs.
SHOW YOUR STRIPES

We’re so thankful for all who participated and made the third annual Show Your Stripes campaign a tremendous success again this year! We received close to 300 photos from supporters showing off their striped gear. Visit www.philaRMH.org/ShowYourStripes to view all the photos.

We had a great time taking this huge group photo at the steps of the Philadelphia Art Museum.

HOLIDAY GIFTS

Our striped merchandise is available year-round and is great to sport during the holiday season! They also make the perfect gift for your clients or loved ones.

Purchase your striped gear today by visiting philarmh.org/SHOP.

GUEST CHEF SPOTLIGHT

We are grateful to the team from P. Agnes, Inc. for supporting our families at the Chestnut Street House by preparing delicious meals as part of our Guest Chef program. Thanks to this great team of 13 volunteers, families were able to enjoy a warm, nutritious meal served with a friendly smile. We appreciate their generosity and dedication to serving PRMH families during their greatest time of need. If you would like to participate in our Guest Chef program, please contact Lori-Anne Miller at lori-anne@philarmh.org.

HESS

We’re so thankful to Hess Corporation for generously donating over 250 of the 2016 Hess Toy Truck and Dragster’s between both of our Houses. The kids loved the trucks and are looking forward to playing with them at the House in the coming years! Being away from home is hard on children and these toys help bring them some holiday cheer.

ACN

Thank you to ACN who generously supported our #ShowYourStripes campaign by matching any donations made through sales of striped gear during their conference in Philadelphia. The conference took place over three days at the Philadelphia Convention Center and through the generosity of the attendees, they were able to raise $65,000 for the House.

Our first annual Champions of Hope Awards dinner, held on October 6, 2016, was a great success! We were thrilled to highlight the vision and determination of our co-founders, Dr. Audrey Evans and Jimmy Murray, and recognize two individuals who share their passion and commitment to children and families, Scott H. Kozin, M.D. and Suzanne Root, Esq. We are grateful to our special guests, Dick and Carol Vermeil, for contributing to the success of the event.

The Champions of Hope Awards gave sponsors the opportunity to honor and recognize an individual or group who gives their time, talent and compassion to the children and families that we serve. The comfort and hope that the House provides would not be possible without the unwavering dedication of our volunteers and the generosity of our supporters. Every day at the two Houses and two Family Rooms, you will find individuals who live to help, and who are ready to alleviate the burdens of the families that walk through our doors in any way they can. They check in new guests, cook meals, drive families to the hospital, and most important of all, they listen. We also have volunteers who devote a week to provide children with cancer and their siblings an unforgettable experience at the Ronald McDonald Camp in the Poconos. We thank our sponsors for highlighting these everyday champions and were proud to honor these unsung heroes.

- The Dr. Audrey E. Evans Award of Excellence was presented to Dr. Scott Kozin by Michael Menkowitz, Dr. Audrey Evans, and Sue and Elliot Menkowitz.
- Thank you to the over 300 guests who attended our Champions of Hope Awards dinner and continuously support our mission of supporting families of seriously ill children.
Tell us about yourself:
I first became involved with the Philadelphia Ronald McDonald House through my work as the Vice President, Publisher, and Chief Revenue Officer of Philadelphia Magazine. At the time, we were seeking a beneficiary of our Design Home program, and we chose PRMH because it was a perfect fit as it aligned with the passion points of our readers. After a few years of partnering with PRMH through the program and seeing first-hand the vital services that it provided, I knew that I wanted to join the Board.

Around the same time, I had an experience with a close neighbor’s child that also moved me to become more engaged with the House. I knew the child well—an outstanding and highly energetic 16-year-old—as she often took care of my dogs. One day while playing tennis, she suddenly fell over and could not move. Her doctors diagnosed her with leukemia, and it made me realize that having healthy children is a gift—not everyone is that lucky. When you are exposed to a seriously ill child, you want to help and contribute, but it’s hard to figure out what to do, except to be there for emotional support.

When you walk in the House and see families in the kitchen, you gain perspective. You may be on the phone making holiday plans with your child who is healthy, but the families that you see here are trying their best to find normalcy in their lives. I find it enormously meaningful to be able to be a part of the House and to be able to do something positive for these families. In fact, I always feel that I do not do enough, and I want to be able to do more.

One of my objectives on the Board is to connect younger individuals with the House and get them involved. They may know the House exists, but they take it for granted. They might not truly understand the need for the House unless they are touched by it. Once they get to meet the families, and hear their stories, they can begin to grasp the gravity of having a seriously ill child and how family’s lives are turned upside down economically and emotionally.

Another critical objective is for us to find ways to explain to the community that, although we are very fortunate to receive 10% of our funding from the Ronald McDonald House Charities, we still have to find ways to find the other 90% to be able to operate. As The Children’s Hospital of Philadelphia expands, the need for the Houses’ services continues to increase, and we must find funding to keep up with the demand.

My bottom line is the families that we help through the House. I’ll never forget a young child who was staying here during the Holiday season and she was extremely excited that the Philadelphia 76ers mascot would be visiting. When the mascot arrived, he did not notice the girl’s excitement right away, so I let him know that she had been waiting for him and had talked about him all day. He immediately paid attention to her and did everything he could to make her happy. The little girl was beaming with happiness and excitement. It was a wonderful moment, and I decided to record it so that her mother could have the video as a keepsake. She was overjoyed and thankful—knowing that I can make one family’s difficult time a little better motivates me to continue my work at the House.

Your child can support the House by joining the 2017 Read for the House program. This student-driven program continues to help support the services that the House provides to families. The 2017 Read for the House program is made possible thanks to the support of Beneficial Bank, the Philadelphia 76ers, and McDonald’s.

Your child can join their school’s team or create a team of his own by visiting www.philarmh.org/read.
